

In our last blog, we began thinking about who really is our client.

In this blog we will talk about being a detective.

Become a detective.

A lot of lead generation is detective work, pure and simple.

If you are reading this, you fall into two camps.

Strong sense of what your client needs and wants are.

You know their every desire, you know what scares them, you know deep down what motivates them to buy.

Or you have no idea, you think you do, but you may be new, fresh to the business.

Or you are looking for new clients, to add to the ones that have either left you, or no longer want your product or service.

Some of this may take some work, but what you do now will help you fine tune your offer to the right client giving you more success.

Doing that will give you a better reaction from your client that you might be getting now.

First, we want to get the basic facts.

If we got on a call, could you tell me this about your client?

Age?

Gender?

Income?

Interests?

What keep them up at night?

Why do they buy off you more than once?

Beliefs?

Feelings and desires?

Know these and it's like putting a puzzle together, then we will see in front of us, a living breathing client that we can sell to.

Next week we discuss a simple process to do this.

See you soon, if you want help with any of this lets "TALK" If you want to speed up the process.
