

“Sales is Easy” We are all in sales aren’t we? Sales often gets a bad rap. I believe that selling is an essential element in any business and, often, it’s your own beliefs around “sales” that prevent you from being successful.

I invite you to move into the mindset that “sales is easy”. Within my book, I will show you the importance of creating the right system and sustaining the right environment.

Every person involved in the selling process has to understand that it is actually a journey. The buyer and the seller are traveling on parallel paths.

You have to know that journey inside and out to get better at selling. It’s not a mysterious process. There are several common steps.

The first step is cultivating an open mindset.

Step two involves developing thorough product knowledge.

Then, you move on to learning how to ask the right questions.

A little further down the path, you and the client work at identifying the client’s needs. Further still, it is time for an offer, or a presentation.

You have nearly made it to the end of the path when you begin to negotiate terms, but, remember that the path never really ends.

You should continue looking after that client to ensure that you will meet again, down the road.
